The day begins as any day for Henry Dahlberg. He arrives on time to the office building, enters the main entrance and takes the elevator to the sixth floor.

Very soon he comes to realize that something is terribly wrong with his time. Course of events are repeated and for short moments he is thrown into the near future.

Slowly, Henry comes to suspect the worst: his linear time has collapsed. Capriciously and without reason, he is now forced to experience his working day in the wrong order.
